They were driving over the Rouge bridge when they met a truck loaded with brick, and driven by Bruce Riley, 2423 Dundas Str. West, Toronto. The truck sideswiped the car causing it to turn part of the way and crash through the iron railing. The car came to a stop when it hung suspended over the side of the bridge which is over 100 ft. above the river bed. Witnesses of the accident were soon on hand to hold the car while the occupants clambered to safety. A small bolt prevented the car from dropping to the ground beneath.

Traffic officers Kay and Hilliard were soon on the scene, as well as Constable Chester. The most seriously injured was Miss Hilda Silver, aged 13, of 34 Tiverton Ave. Toronto, who was taken to the Toronto, East General Hospital, where it was found that she had sustained severe head injuries and possibly a fracture of the skull. THE ISLE OF RETRIBUTION
 BY EDISON MARSHALL

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Ned Cornet is engaged to marry Lenore Hardenworth. They are shipwrecked and with Bess Gilbert they take refuge on an island occupied by a brute named Doomsdorf and his Indian wife. Ned and the girls are made prisoners by the master of the island and he tells them they are to be his slaves.

Lenore is too weak to work, so Bess and Ned take up the burden. Doomsdorf announces that he means to make his prisoners do his winter trapping. They are permitted to build themselves a cabin and Doomsdorf gives them an old stove.

After the cabin is finished Lenore is permitted to remain and help the squaw with the housework, but Bess and Ned are started on different routes to trap for their master.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

The beaver was of course not frozen; and the skin stripped off easily under the little, sawing strokes of his skinning knife. He was rather surprised at its size. It came a nearly round, and it would stretch fully thirty-two inches in diameter. Washing it carefully, he put it over his back and started on.

The traps yielded pelts in his long day's march. Tired out, barely able to stand erect, yet wholly content with his day's catch, Ned made the cabin in the twilight, built his fire, and cooked his meager supper. After supper he skinned out such little animals as he had not taken time to skin on the trail, fished and stretched the pelts, then hung them up to dry. He was almost too tired to remove his wet garments when the work was done. He hardly remembered drawing the blankets over him.

But in spite of the hardship, the wrack of cold, the fatigue that crept upon him like a dreadful sickness, Ned had many moments of comparative pleasure. One of these moments, seemingly yielding him much more delight than the occasion warranted, occurred at the end of the second day of actual trapping.

This day's march had taken him to the Fork's cabin, and there, as twilight drew about him, he was amazed to hear the nearing sound of footsteps in the snow. Some one was coming laboriously toward him, with the slow, dragging tread of deep fatigue.

It was Bess, of course. At this point their lines coincided. It was her third stop, and since she had left the home cabin a day ahead of him, she was perfectly on schedule. He could hardly explain the delight that flashed through him at the sight of her. In this loneliness and silence mere human companionship was blessing enough.

His appearance in the doorway was not a surprise to Bess. She had counted the days carefully, and she knew his schedule would bring him here. But now she was too near death with fatigue to give him more than a smile.

With scarcely a word he lifted her to the cot, covered her with a blanket; and in spite of her protests, went speedily about the work of cooking her supper.

They had a quiet hour of talk before he drew the blankets about her shoulders and left her to drift away in sleep. He was unexplainably exultant; light-hearted for all his dread waste that surrounded him. This little hut of logs was home, tonight. The cold could not come in; the wind would clamor at the roof in vain.

He did her work for her tonight. He skinned the smaller animals she had brought in, then fished and stretched all the pelts she had taken. After preparing his own skins, he made a hard bed for himself on the floor of the hut.

It was with real regret that they took different ways in the dawn. Ned's last office was to prepare kindling for her use on her next visit to the cabin four days hence—hardly realizing that he was learning a little trick of the woodsman's trade that would stand him in good stead in many a dreadful twilight to come.

The trails of these two trappers often crossed in the weeks to come. They kept close track of each other's schedules, and they soon worked out a system whereby they could meet at the Forks cabin at almost every circuit.

No longer did Ned go about his work in the flimsy clothes of the city. Out of the pelts he had dried Bess helped to make him garments and moccasins as warm and serviceable as her own, supplied through an unexpected burst of generosity on Doomsdorf's part soon after their arrival on the island. They brought their hardest problems to the Forks cabin and solved them together.

Day after day the snow sifted down, ever laying a deeper covering over the island, bending down the limbs of the strong trees, obscuring all things under this cold infinity of white. The traps had to be laboriously dug out and reset, again and again.

When the skies cleared, an undrained degree of cold took possession of the land. The fingers froze in the instant that the fur gloves were removed, and the hottest fires could hardly warm the cabins. And on these clear, bitter nights the Northern Lights were an ineffable glory in the sky.

Their bodies built up to endure even such hardship as this. The fact that the snow at last packed was a factor, too; they were able to skim over the white crust at a pace even faster than the best time they had made in early fall.

The result was that at last the companionship between Bess and Ned, forgotten in the dread horror of the early winter months, was revived. Again they had pleasant hours about the stove at the Forks cabin, sometimes working at pelts, sometimes even enjoying the unheard-of luxury of a few minutes of idleness.

Very naturally, and scarcely aware of the fact themselves, they had come to be the best of companions.

Ned's hour with Lenore, however, gave him less satisfaction than they had at first. She somehow failed to understand what he had been through.

Slowly, by the school of hardship, and conquest over hardship, Ned Cornet was winning a new self-mastery; a new self-confidence to take the place of the self-conceit that had brought him to disaster. But the first real moment of waking was also one of peril—on the trapping trail one clear afternoon toward the bitter close of January.

He had been quietly following that portion of the trap line that followed the timber belt between the Twelve-Mile cabin and Forks cabin, and the blazed trail had led him into the depths of a heavy thicket of young spruce. He had never felt more secure. The only hint of danger that the Red Gods afford him did not half penetrate his consciousness and did not in the least call him from his pleasant fancies. It was only a glimpse of green where the snow had been shaken from a compact little group of sapling spruce just beside one of his sets. Likely the wind had caught the little trees just right; perhaps some unfortunate little fur-bearer, a marten perhaps, or a fisher, had sprung back and forth among the little trees in an effort to free himself from the trap. He walked up quietly, located the tree to which the trap chain was attached, bent and started to draw the trap from the small, dense thicket where some creature had dragged it. He was only casually interested in what manner of poor, frozen creature would be revealed between the steel jaws. The beauty of the day had wholly taken his mind from his work.

One moment, and the forest was asleep about him; the little trees looked sadly burdened with their loads of snow. The next, and the man was hurled to the ground by a savage, snarling thing that leaped from the covert like the snow demon it was; and white, gleaming fangs were flashing toward his throat.

CHAPTER XXII.

Except for the impediment of the trap on the creature's foot, there would have been but one blow to that battle in the snow. White fangs would have gone home where they were aimed, and all of Ned Cornet's problems would have been simply and promptly solved.

This was not some little fur-bearer, helpless in the trap. It was no less a creature than that great terror of the snow, a full-grown Arctic wolf, almost as white as the drifts he hunted through. Only the spruce trees know how this fierce and cunning hunter came to snare his foot in the jaws of a marten trap. Nor could any sensible explanation be made why the great wolf did not break the chain with one lunge of his powerful body, instead of slinking into the coverts and waiting developments. The ways of the wild creatures often fail of any kind of an explanation; and it is a bold woodsman who will say what any particular creature will do under any particular condition. When he saw Ned's body within leaping range, he knew the desperate impulse to fight.

The chain of the trap broke like a spring as he leaped. The steel leash that is often used to restrain a savage dog would have broken no less quickly. There was no visible recoil; what little resistance there was seemingly did not in the least retard the blow. It did, however, affect its accuracy. That fact alone saved Ned from instant death.

But as the wolf lunged toward him to complete his work—after the manner of some of the beasts of prey when they fail to kill at the first leap—the inner man of might seemed to waken in Ned's prone body. A great force came to life within him. He lunged upward and met the wolf in the teeth.

A great surge of strength, seemingly without physical limitation, poured through him. In one great bound he overcame the deadly handicap of his own prone position, springing up with terrible, reaching, snatching hands and claspings arms. Some way, he did not know how, he hurled that hundred pounds of living steel from his body before the white fangs could go home.

But there was not an instant's pause. Desperate with fury, the wolf sprang in again a long, white streak almost so fast for the eye to follow. But he did not find Ned at a disadvantage now. The man had wrenched to one side to hurl the creature away, but he had already caught his balance and had braced to meet the second onslaught.

"From Now Onwards"

"Imperial commerce needs from now onwards men with character and vision, who can really fill the key positions in the new age of large-scale industries; who can, if necessary, impose and enforce order and progress; who can hold at bay the disruptive forces that make for uncertainty and chaos.

"There is not a shadow of doubt that University education will produce that type of man and that the technique of commerce that is steadily being developed will offer them more and more opportunities."—Sir Charles Walkfield at the recent King's College centenary celebrations.

Education

What sculpture is to a block of marble, education is to human soul. The philosopher, the saint, and the hero—the wise, the good, or the great man—very often is hid and concealed in a plebeian which a proper education would have disinterred and brought to light.—Addison.

Purity

The highest state of man consists in his purity as a moral being, and in the habitual culture and full operation of those principles by which he looks forth to other scenes and other times.—Abercrombie.

Wisdom

Whosoever thinks that he alone has wisdom, or a tongue, or a soul, such as no other, this man, when laid open, is seen to be empty.—Sophocles.

Obedience

No man shall ever be fit to govern others that knows not first how to obey.—Jeremy Taylor.

British View Soviet Trade With Caution

Question of Debt Recognition by Russia Still Chief Obstacle

London—Now that resumption of diplomatic relations between Great Britain and Russia appears reasonably certain many trade and financial authorities are devoting serious attention to the possibilities of profitable and free intercourse with the latter. Despite loud claims by enthusiasts for recognition of the Soviet Government, it appears however, that the "City" of London, although making vigilant search for new opportunities, is distinctly dubious about Russian possibilities.

The recent trade delegation to Russia received a good deal of publicity and certain of its members were quoted as being highly optimistic regarding forthcoming large-scale business with the Soviets. The official reports of the delegation, however, has not been made public and there seems reason to believe that its tenor will be pitched on a much lower note than the reports of enthusiastic individuals.

The opinion of exports, unswayed by political considerations and only concerned with facts is that too little attention has been paid to the division of Russian territory which has resulted in the formation of Finland, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Russian Poland, and Bessarabia as separate countries. These constituted the cream of the pre-war Russian market and British business with all of them is on a sound and growing scale.

The whole question of trade between the two countries is likely to depend on the extent to which British banks and manufacturers are willing to extend credit.

The question of debt recognition remains the chief difficulty as it always has. Disregarding the vast Russian debt to the British Government, which at the date of the revolution was $622,000,000 and on which 12 years' interest has accumulated, the private debts are still a formidable obstacle.

No voice is raised for Government extension of large credits to Russia except by a few unimportant politicians. The New Statesman has been a consistent friend of Russia, but on this point it says: "We hope that the British Government will not toy with the idea of giving large state credits, or, indeed any state credits, to Moscow; but will aim at a thorough-going commercial treaty, such as it would make with any other country. The real solution of Russia's problems lies in her coming to terms with 'the city.' There is no great difficulty in that; it only needs common sense to arrive at a proper business arrangement. The City is coming; it has no desire to be grasping in the matter of the Russian debts, nor is it frightened about red propaganda. But Government backing of loans will not build a bridge; it will widen the gulf."

Juice of South American Tree Makes Steaks Tender

The toughest beefsteak may be made tender and delicious as the choicest porterhouse if one will carry with him wherever he dines a bottle of pawpaw tree juice and rub it on his meat. The pawpaw is a peculiar tree of northern South America and other tropical regions, where the natives use its juice in this way to improve their meat. It has a number of peculiarities and is subject of an exhibit in the department of botany at Field Museum of Natural History.

The pawpaws are definitely divided into two sexes with distinct characteristics, whereas in most plants and trees each individual is equipped to reproduce itself alone, possessing both the male and female organs. Among the pawpaws, of which there are twenty-seven species, the male and female flowers are produced on separate trees, the male flowers occurring in long scattered racemes and the female ones in short small bundles.

Another peculiarity of the pawpaw is that the juice of the plants contains fibrine, a substance which so far as known exists only in animal flesh. This, however, cannot be regarded as establishing a link between the animal and vegetable kingdoms in the chain of evolution, Field Museum botanists declare.

The pawpaws are succulent tropic trees, which yield a delicious fruit. The tree stems are soft and porous, usually hollow and taper from base to summit, where they have a number of large long-stemmed leaves. The trees reach heights up to twenty feet. The leaves are used by natives of Paraguay as a substitute for soap and are called "mamon ml." The juice of the pawpaw fruit is valuable for medicinal purposes.

25 Rattlesnakes Killed in Attack On Nevada Den

California Scientist Verifies the Stories of Reptiles' Congregation in Lairs

Berkeley.—If a man reports having seen a legion of rattlesnakes sitting around in circles with tails buzzing like a swarm of bees, don't be too sure that he has indigestion or a suffering from the heat.

For many years naturalists have tended to scoff at the idea that rattlesnakes congregated in dens, in spite of occasional rumors and unconfirmed stories to this effect because there never has been a scientific and authoritative description of such a find by a trained observer.

CURATOR VERIFIES STORIES
But this incredulity has been dissipated. You may believe your eyes the next time rattlers swarm around your feet like a school of mackerel. For E. Raymond Hall, curator of mammals in the University of California Museum of Vertebrate Zoology, has just reported the finding of a den that contained scores of rattlers. As evidence of the find he has brought back twenty-five rattlesnakes with him.

Hall explains that he and Ward C. Russell, a student at the university, were making a collection of specimens in the vicinity of Wheeler Peak, Nevada, when they were told of a den of rattlesnakes which residents of the town of Fly, seven miles away, had attacked with rifles, shotguns and dynamite without avail.

149 PREVIOUSLY SLAIN
Their informant, Lloyd Robison, county game warden, stated that 149 snakes had been killed two days before, but it hadn't made much difference, for Hall and Russell found approximately fifty more sitting on their tails with heads in air when they arrived.

The den is situated at the south end of a butte in Spring Valley, White Pine County, Nev., about 250 yards from the Pike's Peak Highway. The den proper is a sunken place in the ground which has been blasted open several times with dynamite in an attempt to kill the inmates.

The snakes were very slow and clumsy, Hall says and by stepping carefully they managed to approach the den with ankle shoes and no leggings. They were armed with pistols loaded with the finest bird shot and killed twenty-five of the reptiles before they retired.

DEN FOUND FIVE YEARS AGO
Hall learned that the site of the den was discovered five years ago by two sheep herders, Doyle C. Robinson and W. C. Kirkland who thought the rattling was caused by a swarm of bees. Each year sorties have been made against the snakes in the spring and fall, but it has been found impossible to kill them off. Hall says that they probably pass the winter in the den and spread out over the valley in the summer.

Goodness

It is possible to go wrong in many ways; but we can go right in one way only. For this season, the former is easy, and the latter difficult; it is easy to miss a mark, but difficult to hit it; and for these reasons, therefore, the excess and defect belong to vice, but the mean state to virtue; for we are good in one way only, but bad in all sorts of ways.—Aristotle.

Japan Views War Crisis As Big Bluff

War Reports Discredited—Tokyo Declared in Control of Situation

Tokyo—Chinese charges that the Soviet is attempting to start a world revolt through the Manchuria crisis is regarded here as nothing more than Chinese propaganda. One of the most gigantic games of bluff the world has ever seen is now in progress in Northern Manchuria between China and Russia, it is held here. Neither party either desires or intends to fight.

China is much concerned since her original bluff—seizure of the Chinese Eastern Railway—has been met by Russia. The Soviet, partially reinforced by world opinion is making the most of its opportunity. Both realize that Japan looms in the offing.

While Japan will not do anything, even if a Russian expeditionary force enters Manchuria, provided it does not penetrate southward from Harbin, still Japan wisely and cannily refuses to give this assurance officially.

Nanking is uncertain which way Japan would jump, since Tokyo might think that the seizure of the Chinese Eastern Railway to-day would be followed by seizure of the South Manchurian Railway to-morrow. Japan holds control of the situation and conversations between Baron Shidehara, the Russian Ambassador, and the Chinese Minister in Tokyo constitute the read, although unofficial, Chinese-Russian negotiations to-day.

Japan's decision how to act in the present crisis constitutes a vital factor, and that decision is not of future developments is the attitude of the Tokyo Government, which at present is unperturbed and unruffled, despite wild rumors and slight border clashes.

Queen Charlotte Islands May Be New Oil Field

Masset, Queen Charlotte Island, B.C.—Are these islands destined to become a second California in production of oil? That is the question on the lips of all settlers and hundreds of visitors who are watching engineers from the United States and Eastern Canada conduct investigations regarding possibilities of oil production. A new oil seepage has been discovered at Stalgate on the west coast of Graham Island and a new impetus has been given the movement. Experts have examined numerous seepages on these islands. They have cautiously refrained from talking too much but it is said they are surprised at many of their discoveries. A large number of prospects have been stated and a movement is on foot among the settlers to form a local company for development.

Many local men are becoming rich through logging Sitka spruce used extensively for aeroplanes owing to its light weight. They are inclined to put their money back in the islands but the popular opinion is that a Canadian expert should be sent here by the government to report immediately. It has been known for many years that there oil seepages and one well was sunk years ago but the project petered out through lack of capital although the hole is still exuding gas.

The traveler was on his way east but he had gotten no further than the fever-and-ague district of a Southern State. As the train jerked to a stop at one particularly desolate town he put his head out of the window and called to a native propped against a post: "Tell me, what do you call this dried-up, dreary, ornery, low-down place?" "That's near enough, stranger," was the melancholy answer. "Just let it go at that."

Canadian Salmon Prices Advance

Excessive Demand in Europe Takes All Available Supplies

Quebec.—Due to the excessive demand for Canadian salmon from Europe, the price of the product from the North Shore, Gaspé and Saguenay has gone up, while it is almost impossible to obtain it here, according to J. H. DeRome, manager of the Quebec Harbor Commission cold storage plant, and inventor of a new method of freezing salmon.

"When fish was frozen the old way, as in former years, there was practically no European demand, as the fish could not be kept sufficiently fresh to ensure acceptance on arrival, and if large quantities were processed for the local market, there was not sufficient demand for them. In many cases several years ago, we have had as many as 1,500 oxes of salmon spoiled on account of their being no demand for them," declared Mr. DeRome, in discussing the situation.

"Now, with the demand far exceeding the supply, advantageous prices, in excess of local ones, and with future markets assured, fish exporters are naturally shipping all they can to Europe.

"The last shipment to be made from Quebec will be loaded some time soon, and will be around 25,000 pounds. Next year there will be an even greater demand for Canadian salmon, for Germany will be on the market."

With the salmon market for the season almost over, attention will focus from next week on, on the eel market, and as Quebec ships around 1,000,000 pounds of eels each year, there will be considerable activity around the Island of Orleans, from Lévis to Lotbinière and all around the Quebec district. Germany takes the bulk of the Quebec eel catch.

Cancer Hospital To Open in London

Four of Great Radium Specialists to Take Charge

London.—Mount Vermont Hospital at North Wood, Middlesex is being reorganized as a special cancer hospital and research station with accommodation for 250 patients.

Four of the greatest radium specialists—Dr. Donaldson, Mr. Stanford Cade, Lady Barret and Mr. Keynes will take charge. An order has already been placed for 160 platinum needles containing from one-half to three milligrammes each of radium. Notable results are expected.

Three unemployed miners having emigrated to South Africa, and not being successful in obtaining employment, decided to journey up country, where, far away from civilization, they came across an explorers' depot, fairly well stocked with food. After a few days, when the stores had become exhausted, and all three fed up, yet very hungry, one of their number decided to go in search of food, with the avowed determination to bring back something to eat even if it were a lion. He had not searched far when he encountered a lion, which was also in search of food. The lion at once bounded toward the man, who turned and sped as rapidly as humanly possible toward the hut. On nearing the hut door, which was open, he stumbled and fell, too precipitately for the lion to recover, which bounded into the hut. When the man picked himself up, he quickly pulled the hut door to, and shouted to his mates inside, "Here you are! Skin that whilst I fetch another."

The Fleet Returns As Scrap Metal

Remnants of Navy Go to Krupp Furnaces

Ruhrort, Germany.—Dutch lighters brought the broken hopes of the German Empire to this river port. The cargoes consisted of scrap steel, remnants of the German high seas fleet, scuttled by the crews at Scapa Flow after surrender to the British.

The scrap goes to the Krupp smelting furnaces, to be turned, perhaps, into plowshares.

Thus the proud units of the imperial navy return to the place whence they came. Their armor plates, steel turrets and other fixtures were fashioned at the Krupp works, which out of the remains of death-dealing engines will now manufacture domestic ironmongery.

Undertakings

In most big undertakings one or two men do the work, while the rest sit near and talk till the ripe decorations begin to fall.—Kipling.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT
WHITBY HIGH SCHOOL

The Board of Education of Whitby and the Advisory Agricultural Committee of the Board feel that it will be in the interests of the town and the surrounding districts to provide better facilities for the education of boys who may remain on farms, as well as any others who do not wish to take advantage of the regular courses provided in the school. To make it possible to give a more practical course along agricultural lines, a special building has been erected containing an agricultural class room and work shop equipped with work benches, tools, and forges. This agriculture department will not interfere with the regular courses in the school.

Of the boys who enter, the first form of the High School, less than ten per cent attend University. Our educational system in the secondary schools has in the past been largely built up to serve this small number going on to University. Many of the remaining ninety per cent would gain more useful knowledge in some vocational course such as will be carried on in the Agricultural Department of the Whitby High School. Great deal of stress is now given to vocational education, and we have large technical schools in the cities and some of the larger towns. In these schools, pupils are trained for positions in the various trades and industries. Large sums of money are spent each year in carrying on these schools. The government paying a large part of this expense. The government of Ontario is very anxious that special education be given to farm boys as well as those preparing for other lines of work, and they are doing everything possible to encourage the establishing of Agricultural High Schools and Departments where conditions warrant it. These schools and departments are planned to meet the needs of the boys who expect to farm or to follow some other line of work connected with farming. The course of instruction will provide for a good general education and for special instruction in the subjects relating to agriculture. Among the general subjects will be English Composition, Literature, Public Speaking, Arithmetic, Bookkeeping, and Typewriting, History and Geography. The agriculture subjects will deal with Botany, Entomology, Veterinary, Science Field Husbandry, Animal Husbandry, Dairying, Beekeeping, Draining, Horticulture, Poultry, Physics, Chemistry, Mechanics. In all cases the work will be as practical as possible. As far as possible the services of specialists will be secured for the various lines of work. The Department of Agriculture will cooperate in every way possible to make the Department a success. The members of the Advisory Committee are very anxious that a good practical course be put on that will be of real value to young farmers. They are anxious that a large number will enter this fall so that the Board will feel justified in carrying on classes separate from the regular matriculation classes. At present provision is made for two years work, but if necessary it may be extended to a four year course. If any boys have attended High school and have their matriculation they will be credited with this work and may proceed with the straight agricultural work. Boys who may have been on a farm for a few years and who left school while in the fourth class but before passing the entrance may secure a special certificate to enter this course. Any boys or parents who might be interested in this work should interview one of the following: the members of the advisory committee; Jos. Mitchell, Fred Rowe, E. L. Chapman, D. J. Thompson, Herb. Webster, John Larkin, W. J. H. Richardson, F. L. Beecroft, R. A. Hutchison, W. M. Croskery, A. Archibald (principal).

CLAREMONT

George and Mrs. Bentley, of Brooklyn, spent Sunday with the Lynn family.

Clifford and Mrs. Soden, of Toronto, spent Sunday and Monday with the former's parents, Frank and Mrs. Soden.

A. G. and Mrs. Clark, of the lake shore, spent Sunday with Wm. Mundell and daughter.

Frank and Mrs. Chidlow spent Labor Day in Toronto taking in the sights at the Exhibition.

Ben and Mrs. Kilpatrick and two daughters took a most enjoyable motor trip through Muskoka during the holiday.

Thomas and Mrs. Paterson were in the city on Tuesday on business and also visiting the Canadian National Exhibition.

Mrs. (Dr.) Minns, of Toronto, spent a couple of days with Mrs. Yakes, while on her way to her cottage at Bobcaygeon.

Mrs. (Dr.) Atmore, of Sarnia, and her sister, Miss Margaret Thexton, of Toronto, visited with J. H. and Mrs. Beal this week.

Labor Day was observed very quietly in the village, the stores being all closed and many having gone to the city and other points.

The complaints about the cold weather have ceased for the time being, as the past week has been exceedingly warm, the temperature being around the 90 degree mark.

Mrs. D. Yake, of Cappon, Alberta, and Mrs. Nunn and son, Stanley, of Oyan, Alberta, after spending several weeks with Hattie and Rae Walker and other relatives in Ontario.

Mrs. J. Heusted and two children, Margaret and John, left for their home in Vassar, Mich., on Sunday, after spending the past week with the former's parents, J. H. and Mrs. Beal.

Mr. and Mrs. Stokes and Miss Stokes, of Chatham, and Mrs. Chapman, of Kitchener, who have been spending a few days with their sister, Mrs. McCallum, and nephew, left for their home on Sunday.

H. A. and Mrs. Lawton and daughter, who have been residents of Claremont during the past six months, during which time Mr. Lawton has carried on a boot and shoe business at the corner store, have returned to the city to reside.

Our public and continuation schools re opened on Tuesday, after enjoying a two months' vacation. There was a good attendance with a number of new pupils. Work will now be entered with next mid summer's examinations in view.

Traffic was very heavy on the highway over the week end. Many who had been spending the holidays in northern points, were returning home on Monday so that their children would be ready for the re-opening of school on Tuesday.

The anniversary services in connection with the Baptist Church have been fixed for Sunday, Sept. 29th, when the preacher will be Rev. C. R. Duncan, M. A., B. D., of Toronto. The annual Supper and Concert will be held on the following Monday evening. The College St. Baptist Quartette party will provide the program and expectations run high for a first class concert. Do not forget to book the date. Watch for further details.

Nearly all the farmers in this community have finished their harvesting operations and many are also through with their threshing. The yield of grain, while of good quality, lacks in quantity. Fall wheat seeding will now take up the attention of many farmers for a week or two. The land which has been summer fallowed is in good condition for seeding, but those who have plowing to do find the land very hard and dry, and in some cases almost impossible to plow.

Numerous complaints are being made regarding the practice of some of our men, who are the proud possessors of a motor car, in driving through the streets of our village at night, and causing the engines in their cars to back fire, thus badly frightening some of our older residents who are not in the best of health, and making them exceedingly nervous. The young men concerned in this practice will be well advised if they discontinue the silly practice for which they are liable to a fine.

The Claremont Horticultural Society held its annual fall show of flowers on Saturday, Aug. 31st, and it was again a decided success. There was a large number of exhibits in the different classes, the quality of which was declared by the judge to surpass that of last year's show. The prizes for the Floral Display were won by Mrs. W. Birkett and Mrs. J. Evans. A number of the members won several prizes in the different classes. The Society is very grateful to the competent judges, Ira Boyer and F. L. Green, of Greenwood. During the afternoon and evening the ladies served light refreshments.

Fred Evans is erecting a new residence east of the creamery. E. L. and Mrs. Ruddy, of Pickering, spent a few hours in town one day last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Stotts, of Detroit, have been visiting for a couple of days with Mrs. Vex Middleton.

September opened up on Sunday with the warmest weather of the season. Evidently the weather-man is making amends for his neglect in failing to give us real summer weather in the summer months.

A judgment was recently given by a judge at Hamilton which will be of interest to motorists. A motorist coming on to the highway from a side street collided with another car. The judge gave a decision in favor of the man coming from the side street, and he pointed out that when a man stops his car at a stop street he has done all that is required by law, and it is as much the duty of the man on the through street to avoid the accident as his. The judgment should help to clear the air of a misapprehension that motorists on stop streets must wait indefinitely to cross the thoroughfare and assume the entire responsibility when an accident occurs.

"Nothing Ever Happened"; But the Seaside She Found Thrills in Plenty

By William Freeman

Loneliness is a comparative term. And Evadne Carroll, even among the jolly, well-meaning crowd at the Mount Marina Boarding House (proprietors, the Misses Johnson), found herself at times as lonely as the very last dodo.

Evadne spent a good deal of her time in the neighborhood of the Mermaid's Pool. (There was a legend that a mermaid had once been stranded there). The pool, in a miniature bay, was half-way between Seatyde and its nearest neighbor, Shellingham. Few people came there, but Evadne loved the place. Behind was a narrow stretch of shingle, and then cliffs in which were several adorable little caves. In front was a wide strip of sand, and beyond that just sea and sky.

She didn't see the beginning of the accident, because the coast at that particular point crooks a finger, cutting off from view the long stretch of sand which reaches to Shellingham. Her first intimation was the thudding of an engine. A moment later a glittering motor-cycle flashed around the finger of cliff, skidded on a stone, hit a bigger stone, checked itself violently, and shot its rider forward across the handle-bars in a magnificent, terrifying arc which flung him with an enormous splash in the middle of the pool. Simultaneously, the machine burst into flames.

Evadne, drenched by the spray, leapt to her feet with a terrified gasp. But all she was capable of doing was staring hopelessly at the plunging figure.

He was wearing an outfit of leather, with a padded cap and thick gloves. This impeded his efforts to get to the bank, but it probably prevented him sinking.

"Rope—throw me a rope!" he shouted.

"Rope?" she echoed, staring wildly about her. There was no rope near. She made a stumbling movement towards the motor-cycle. It was still burning, but the flames had died down. Trailing from the back was a long leather strap. Evadne, with half-shut eyes, seized the end of it and jerked. Something gave way, and the strap dapped free, sending a little cascade of sparks on her wrist.

She ran as near as she could to the man in the pool, and flung one end of the strap towards him. It hit the water with a sharp smack, but trailed short. It wasn't until the fourth attempt that he succeeded in catching it by which time she had waded out nearly to her knees.

"Don't leave go," he called, and Evadne didn't. She watched him struggle towards her, felt the strain relax, heard his say, "It's all O.K.—I've touched bottom," and then lost sight of him altogether in a horrible suffocating mist in which her own voice, sounding weak and distant and like someone else's, murmured: "I—I believe I'm going to faint."

She opened her eyes again, to find herself propped against the boulder that had been her seat. On his knees beside her was a youth with a mop of very wet, fair hair, a tanned skin, and blue eyes. From the tingling warmth of her palms, Evadne guessed that he had been chafing them. On the shingle near by lay the airman-like outfit in which he had entered the pool.

"Wha—what—" she began.

"All's well," said the young man reassuringly.

"Are you hurt?" asked Evadne, sitting up.

"Nothing to speak of." He touched a cut cheek. "That's about all. I'd like to thank you properly," he concluded, "but I don't know your name. Our introduction was so dashed informal!"

She told him.

"Mine's Peter Ross," he said. "I think you've behaved like a heroine. I'm reasonably certain, in fact, that I owe you my life."

The colour rushed to Evadne's cheeks.

"That's nonsense! What are you going to do now?"

"Frankly, I haven't a notion, beyond getting away from here at top speed."

Her heart gave an uncomfortable throb as she said: "But why?"

"Because, Miss Carroll, there are some people so hot on my track that it's a wonder the poor old bus didn't catch fire before. I gave them the slip in Shellingham High Street, and a block in the traffic did its best; but they will have picked up the trail again by now."

"And what's going to happen when they have picked it up?" demanded Evadne, scrambling, still a little unsteady, on her feet.

Depends on my luck," said Peter Ross, with a shrug of his soaked shoulders. "Of course, I've got—"

He slid a hand to his coat pocket, and then out again. "No, I haven't!"

"I hate to ask so many questions," said Evadne, "but what haven't you got?"

"My fare back to London. Every sixpence I had was in a silly kind of fancy wallet that a dear old lady sent me for luck. It must have shot out into the pool when I took a header from the cycle."

"It's too late to bother about wallets and things," said Evadne, in a low voice. "There's a motor-cycle coming along the beach here. Can't you hear it? Hurry into the cave—that one that doesn't look more than a yard or two deep. It twists to the left, and there's just space to get through if you wriggle sideways. I'll go first and show you."

Peter snatched up his leather coat and hat, and together they dashed across the strip of shingle into a shallow hollow in the cliff which appeared to have decided that it wasn't worth while to become a real ave. Almost immediately, however, Evadne vanished, and Peter, following, found himself in a narrow gallery running roughly parallel with the beach.

"Wait," he whispered to Evadne. The purring motor-cycle had swung round the crooked finger of cliff and stopped on the far side of the pool. Another followed.

"Guess that ends the chase!" said a voice, clear above the throbbing of the engine. Another said: "Poor devil!" and something else that Evadne couldn't catch.

"Is there any other way out of this?" Peter whispered to Evadne.

"Not that I know of," she whispered back. "But I haven't explored far. It's awfully dark, and I've never remembered to bring a candle and some matches until it was too late."

"I haven't any matches, but here's a petrol-lighter." He produced it from a waistcoat-pocket as he spoke.

It was fortunate that there were no side paths down which they could stray, on the other hand, the direction changed so often that they completely lost their bearings. They emerged at last in a sandy clearing, across the floor of which a gloomy stream, just narrow enough to jump, was flowing.

"And here," said Peter Ross, extinguishing the precious petrol-lighter, "we make our first halt. I trust," he added politely, "that I haven't seriously dislocated your morning's programme?"

"It isn't exactly what I'd planned," said Evadne, with equal formality. "But what's the use of talking like this," she broke off with sudden impatience, when we haven't the least idea how soon we're going to get out again, or how it's all going to end?"

"I wouldn't let that depress you. This is one of those incoherent days that begin unexpectedly and go on being unexpected. By the way, have you ever come as far as this before?"

"Never. Why?"

"Because there are two tracks, both very much uphill, one bending to the right and the other to the left. Which appeals to you?"

"Let's take the left-hand one; we can always turn back if we don't like it," suggested Evadne.

They took the left-hand path accordingly. Evadne, breathless, had scrambled to a point where a jutting angle of rock made a convenient seat, when she became aware that Peter, after following her part of the way, had turned back.

"What's wrong?" she called.

"The petrol-lighter," his voice came echoing back out of the darkness. "It was jerked out of my hand."

"Can't you find it again?"

"It rolled into the water. I've groped, but it's hopeless."

"Then we shall have to fumble our way forward as well as we can."

"Or go back," he hinted.

"Someone may still be on guard outside."

"I'll chance that."

"And that stream we've just passed looked so—so deep and dark. I expect it's deeper still by now. The tide is coming in. I think I'd rather push on."

The track—mercifully—widened as they pushed forward, but the loose stones made it difficult going.

"Want any help?" said Peter, for Evadne, a pace or two ahead, had given a sudden gasp.

"My ankle. I've twisted it a bit. But don't worry. I expect it'll be better when we move on."

They made a fresh start. But it was slow going; the stones seemed to become larger and stonier, the track twisted more, and Evadne's little sobs of pain refused to be suppressed. And the darkness began to weigh on her.

"I must stop!" she gasped at last.

"How far do you think we've come?"

"Not very far. It's awfully misleading. But at any rate"—Peter was groping about as he spoke—"you can sit down and rest."

Evadne collapsed obediently on a shelf of rock.

"You won't go away?" she murmured.

"Of course not!"

From her perch she could hear the fierce lapping noises of the stream that the tide was steadily widening and deepening.

"Don't you think," said Evadne drowsily, "that we've both behaved rather like idiots?"

"Perhaps," he conceded. "But so many people do. After all, it was a crisis."

"I suppose you're running away from the police?"

"Yes."

"It was tactless of me to ask. But underground here things seem so different: I wish you'd tell me something about yourself."

"Must I? All right. I'm a racing cyclist, and that contraption which took a header into the pool was a patent that was going to revolutionize road traffic. I took it out of the garage to test it, and some opposition people sprinted in pursuit. I put on a spurt, and the local police got interested, too, and the end—well, you saw the end."

"Is that all the story?"

"Not quite."

"Isn't it a pity that one never does hear quite all? If I wasn't quite so sleepy I'd tell you about myself."

"Won't there be time for a synopsis between yawns?"

"I'll try. I work in an office—one of those offices in which you just go on and on, waiting for something to happen. But it never does."

"What about to-day?"

"This isn't during office hours."

Silence followed. Peter waited. He waited until the little lapping noises of the rising water blended with Evadne's deep, regular breathing.

Then, with immense caution, to avoid disturbing her, he took a dozen steps downhill.

The last step ended in water.

He fumbled his way back, and then went forward a little. When he came back, he roused the girl.

"This passage ends in another open space with a gully in the roof. If I crawled up and out, I might be able to hold you after me. I ought to have known there was an opening of some kind by the freshness of the air."

"How—how splendid!" She slid one foot to the ground. "But you'll have to be patient with me. Doesn't the sea sound awfully near?"

"It does rather," agreed Peter. But he didn't tell her how near it really was.

That final forty or fifty yards was an agonizing business. If it hadn't been for the glimmer of light at the end, Evadne would have collapsed helplessly. As it was, she set her teeth and stumbled on. They came at last to the space at the end of the passage. Overhead, just within reach of Peter's fingertips, was a ragged gap in the roof. Brambles veiled it, but blessed air and daylight filtered through. Evadne, seated on the sandy floor, watched him roll a big stone underneath.

"If I stand on this and make a flying jump—" said Peter.

She nodded, and closed her eyes. She heard a scuffling noise, and then a shout of triumph. When she looked Peter was peering down at her through the brambles.

"If you can balance on the stone," he called, "I'll try to haul you up. It's either that or going into Shellingham for help; there isn't another human being in sight. Can you manage it?"

"I'll try."

She got on the stone. Thank Heaven—it didn't wobble much. She tried to brace her nerves by taking deep breaths, but they were suspiciously like sobs. The choking mist that had swirled about her at the pool was rising again.

"Steady!" said Peter. "Here—"

She was vaguely aware of a coat sleeve flapping near. She clutched at it, swaying, swaying—

"Don't let go!" she heard, but her fingers wouldn't keep their grip. They slipped; the muscles refused to obey the frantic orders her brain gave them.

Peter's hands caught hers.

"Now!" he said, and she made a last effort.

It was four hours later. In the "palm lounge" of the Mount Marina Boarding House Evadne sat; her ankle dexterously bandaged by the elder Miss Johnson, who knew all about first-aid work. Everyone had been extremely kind—far kinder, Evadne felt, than she deserved. She had returned inconspicuously and without expense. A motorist who had been picnicking in a hollow of the downs had suddenly appeared, sympathized, and undertaken to drive both Peter and herself back. Peter himself had accepted, very sensibly and without argument, the pound note she insisted on lending him.

"I'll bring it back on Friday," he had said.

Miss Johnson "tuned in" on the wireless. Evadne listened, with her mind elsewhere, until in the news bulletin, her ear caught—"This afternoon, at Brookfields, Captain Peter Ross, the well-known amateur racing cyclist, broke every record in the motor-cycle class on a new model of his own design—a performance all the more remarkable in view of the fact that a duplicate model, with Captain Ross himself in the saddle, was destroyed by fire during some experimental trials earlier in the day at Seatyde."

"We shall see one another again tomorrow," said Evadne to herself. And the younger Miss Johnson, catching a glimpse of her face, thought how much benefit that pretty Miss Carroll had already gained from her holiday.

"We shall see one another tomorrow."

If she had only known it, Captain Peter Ross, in his London hotel, was saying precisely the same thing.

Three eggs, 1 cup sugar 2½ level tablespoons cornstarch, grated rind of 2 oranges, juice of 1 orange, 1½ cup milk. Separate whites from yolks of eggs and beat yolks with half the sugar until light. Mix cornstarch smooth with ¼ cup of milk, and scald remainder in double boiler. When almost boiling stir in cornstarch, and cook until thick. Add yolks of eggs, sugar, orange rind and juice. Cool slightly and pour into previously baked crust. Beat whites of eggs stiff, add remainder of sugar, and flavor, if liked, with a little orange juice or grated rind. Pile on top of pie, put in a moderate oven to set and brown slightly.

BANANA PUDDING

Thicken a pint of milk with 2 eggs beaten with ¾ cup of sugar and a teaspoon of cornstarch. Take from the fire and add the juice of ½ lemon. Fill a serving dish with alternate layers of cake and sliced bananas, moistening each layer with custard. Serve very cold with whipped cream.

To gain thirty pounds in three months, and win back health and strength was the happy experience of Mrs. Margaret Brethour of Cornwall, Ont., who gives all the credit for it to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"After the birth of my baby, I was in the hospital four months," she wrote, "and came home weighing only sixty-five pounds. I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and it wasn't long until I weighed ninety-five pounds and my general health was of the best. ## Gdynia and Danzig Commercial Rivals

Danzig.—After a brief period of quiet, rumblings are again noticeable in the relations of the Free State of Danzig with its neighbor, Poland.

The writer went on a sight-seeing expedition under the auspices of a couple of Polish guides. On trying to enter a certain building the party found every difficulty put in its way, until two of its members explained discreetly that they were leaving for London in a few hours. English? Yes? All difficulties immediately vanished.

Apart from the racial question, Danzig, though no longer incorporated in the Reich, is unmistakably German; there are certain economic issues which cause annoyance. Danzigers are aroused by the progress of the upstart port of Gdynia created on Polish soil not 20 miles away. They also resent somewhat the "intrusion" of Polish business men.

Reasons for Rivalry

Among the major questions which have agitated Polish-Danzig relations may be cited the affair of the pillar boxes—trivial in itself, but involving the question whether Poland had a privileged position in the town as well as in the port of Danzig—and the affair of the Westerplatte, where Poland tried to establish an ammunition dump to the great indignation of the Danzigers, who declared the dump would be a menace to safety.

Both cases went to the League, with the result that Poland won a tempered victory in the first, and Danzig in the second. The pillar boxes are still there, and the observant traveler who arrives at Danzig by sea will still pass a secluded spot at the entrance to the Vistula Canal guarded by a Polish sentry.

It is not easy to decide to what extent the danzigers are right in thinking that Gdynia is depriving them of business. Danzig has a number of unemployed, but so has the German port of Stettin, further to the west. The capacity of Danzig Harbor is limited by the length of the wharves around which the town is built. It would be an extremely expensive business to expand the port beyond its present size.

Gdynia Able to Expand

Gdynia, on the other hand, is being built on the open sea and can expand indefinitely without great difficulty, and for an outlay not prohibitive. Its present capacity is about 2,000,000 tons of cargo a year and rapidly developing. The population is 30,000,000 and the annual natural increase nearly 500,000.

Nowhere in the world perhaps will you see so many children, and the natural resources of the country are scarcely scratched. Given peace and reasonably good government, there is little doubt that in the years to come both Danzig and Gdynia will be taxed to their utmost capacity to deal with growing volume of traffic.

Apart from this, however, it must be said that Danzig itself was partly responsible for Poland's decision to have a port of its own. During the war between Poland and the Soviets in 1920, Danzig, on the plea of maintaining its neutrality, refused to unload some cargoes of munitions destined for the Polish army. It is probable that even without the incentive of avoiding similar trouble for the future, Poland would have decided to have its own port on its own territory, but it is undeniable that the action of the Danzigers made a probability into a certainty.

Danzig's rival, or collaborator, is built on what the world calls "the Polish corridor," but which the Poles prefer to describe as Pomorze. The Poles justify their possession of this region by the fact that the inhabitants are of Slavonic origin and therefore are a kindred race, but there is no doubt that the existence of this narrow neck of land, running north and south and separating East Prussia from the rest of Germany, is a cause of considerable irritation to the latter.

On the other hand, if it did not exist there would be an exactly similar strip of territory running east and west and dividing Poland from its coveted contact with the sea. As things are at present, travelers passing from one part of Germany to the other across the corridor find themselves subjected to some inconveniences, such as being looked in their compartments while the train is on Polish territory. If the corridor were the other way round, it would be the Polish travelers who would encounter difficulties.

SAVE THE CHILDREN

In Summer When Childhood ailments Are Most Dangerous.

Mothers who keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house may feel that the lives of their little ones are reasonably safe during the hot weather. Stomach troubles, cholera infantum and diarrhoea carry off thousands of little ones every summer. In most cases because the mother does not have a safe medicine at hand to give promptly. Baby's Own Tablets relieve these troubles, or if given occasionally to the well child they will prevent their coming on. The Tablets are guaranteed to be absolutely harmless even to the new-born babe. They are especially good in summer because they regulate the bowels and keep the stomach sweet and pure. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Hebrides May Renew Kelp Manufacture

Oban, Scot.—About 70 years ago, the manufacture of kelp from seaweed was an important industry in the Hebrides. Two experts, representing important French interests, have just concluded an examination of some parts of the Hebridean coast, with a view to arriving at a decision as to the prospects of reviving the kelp industry in the Western Isles. These experts believe that, as the exact type of seaweed needed for the industry grows in great abundance on rocks adjacent to the coast of the Isles, the industry if conducted efficiently would undoubtedly be successful.

Formerly the kelpers of the Hebrides cut the seaweed off the rocks and towed it to shore, but later the workers used weed torn by the waves off the rocks. According to the visiting experts, the seaweed should be cut off the rocks to secure the best chemical yield, and rock surfaces at different points of the coast were inspected to discover whether a weed-cutting machine as used by kelpers in France could be used in the Hebrides.

A Different Woman

"I have great pleasure in informing you that Kruschen Salts have worked wonders for me. I have been a great sufferer of liver and kidney trouble, and after trying one bottle I am a different woman. I had to give up my work, but thanks to Kruschen Salts I am back at work again, and I give my son a little every morning, and I don't hear of the little complaints now which a child generally gets. He is happier and brighter. I have enclosed a snap-shot of son and self. I am 43 years, boy 6 years. I shall always highly recommend Kruschen, and I would not be without them myself in a hurry." —(Mrs. M. P. Original letter on file for inspection.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at drug and department stores in Canada at 75c a bottle. A bottle contains enough to last for 4 or 5 months—good health for half-a-cent a day.

Notwithstanding this Col. Rowe has left at our office a sample of oats grown on his farm that measures five feet tall, and this sample was not taken from his best field.

—Seven cases of reckless driving over the week end has been entered by Traffic Officer Hilliard. The most serious occurred on Sunday afternoon when E. F. Studd, of Mimico, is charged with cutting into A. Dickson, of Toronto, forcing him into the ditch, and upsetting the car which was badly damaged. —Recently a farmer in Culross township had his whole herd of cows milked dry, a fact he discovered when he went out to do his morning milking. This is a case in which the owner would find it difficult to identify the stolen property. The guilty party would find it to his advantage to cease operations or he may find himself with a lot of trouble on his hands.

—One night last week constable Wm. Chester arrested two men on the highway west of Dunbarton, and charged one, Albert Sedore, of Toronto, with being intoxicated while in charge of a motor vehicle, and the other, Morley Stephenson, of Cobourg, with being drunk in a public place. They appeared in the Pickering Police Court, before Magistrate Clark. Both pleaded guilty. Sedore was sentenced to seven days in jail, and Stephenson was fined $10 and costs.

—On Wednesday evening as Thos. Hatch, accompanied by his wife and daughter, Mrs. Goe. Cowan, and the latter's two young children, were returning from Toronto, he was turning into the service station at the east end of the Highland Creek bridge, another car cut in ahead of him resulting in a collision in which both cars were wrecked. Those in Mr. Hatch's car were all cut badly. Mrs. Cowan received a bad cut on the back of her hand and on forehead. She was taken to the Oshawa hospital for treatment.

—What may be recognized as the chief sporting event of the year was the Marathon swimming match which took place on Friday last in Lake Ontario, in front of the the Toronto Exhibition grounds. Nearly three hundred contestants entered the water, each one of whom hoped if he or she did not win first prize, that he would be one of the first six, there being six prizes awarded. This match was probably the greatest swimming event that the world has ever seen. History records some wonderful swimming feats that have taken place in the past, but none have equalled that which took place on Friday last as regards speed and endurance. It was witnessed by many thousands, but a large proportion of these could not see the great struggle to advantage, as all they could see was a head or arm bob up now and again and very few could tell how the race was going. Those living hundreds of miles distant, by means of the radio, knew exactly how the match was progressing. Every minute the news was broadcasted from the official boat. The outstanding feature of the great aquatic event occurred at the finish of the race when Keating, the New York man, when asked to speak through the microphone, said "I hope Vierkotter will now apologize for what he said about me at the Lake George swim." He had reference to a report that the German swimmer had said that Keating was towed in that 31-mile swim. Investigation by the Swimming Association cleared Vierkotter in the matter. It turned out that Vierkotter's manager at that time had made a statement to the effect that Keating was towed. It was thought that the matter was finally settled to the satisfaction of all. Evidently Keating had harbored that feeling of hatred during the past two years, and he longed to have revenge for a fancied wrong. His remark over the radio has lost him millions of friends, and he is now despised by thousands who were his friends. By his manly attitude towards his conqueror in the swim, Vierkotter has become exceedingly popular. He has proved himself to be a true sportsman and a perfect gentleman. He is a German by birth, but he is now a naturalized British subject, and he says he is proud to be a Canadian.
